Snapshots of Possibility

Inclusive Education is based on a dream in which all children are given the safety to develop into whole human beings, able to think and learn, love and understand each other, be creative, feel empathy and compassion, work and play co-operatively and to act powerfully within their communities and as world citizens. This book shows that many mainstream nurseries, schools and colleges are changing and developing their practice to begin to make this dream a reality, especially for those children who are currently vulnerable to exclusion and segregation. They are inspiring stories, full of hope for the future.

Where Are They Now?

This little book brings us the voices of fifteen of the first disabled children to go to mainstream schools. Most of them are now young adults. They tell us of their past struggles, their current lives and their plans for the future. They have been part of history in the making and look set to continue to build a more inclusive society for us all.
